Happiness

One of the words that needs to be profoundly explored and understood is the word happy or happiness. Webster's Dictionary (1913) defines happiness as: Good luck; good fortune; prosperity. ² An agreeable feeling or condition of the soul arising from good fortune.

Dictionary.com says:

Synonyms: satisfaction, enjoyment, delight, contentedness. The problem with the definitions is that neither are necessarily based in reality. In thought and in life we have what we call abstract and concrete. Look up the word "abstract" and you will find even further confusion. So, what about a good definition of happy or happiness that fits your world, your perceived reality? What does it mean for you and me to be happy in life?

One person is poor and another wealthy. But which one is happy? One lives in a bustling crowded city while the other on a farm. Which one is happier because of where they live. Obviously, it is a complex, complicated topic or formula. But I recently heard a definition of happiness that seems to fit well. Yet it will not necessarily make you happy to hear. Today life has never been objectively better and subjectively worse. Our desires are mimetic. How happy are you? It can be measured by your quality of life minus your envy.

Now go back again to the story of the Garden and the forbidden fruit. It was envy that made Eve dissatisfied while living in Paradise! And it is envy that makes the most blessed among us to be unhappy. It is the lack of envy that makes the most difficult lives embrace happiness.

I realize the reality of happiness is more complex than this but take this singular truth and meditate on it in terms of your own life. How have our expectations affected our lives for either good or ill? How has our envy of "what could be" changed or warped our outlook on life? How has envy thwarted our understanding of who we are and what is our purpose in life? Most people seem to think that their purpose in life is to be "happy." Then, any aspect of life that derails or prevents our desires causes us anger, depression or anxiety. Maybe our choice of fairness in life or our envy might explain how Cain could be so angry with his brother Abel. While on the other hand while Noah saw all the corruption surrounding him and built an Ark. In Acts, Simon the Sorcerer envied the power of the Apostles all the while the Apostles rejoiced when they suffered unjustly for preaching hope. It is why a poor man on the street may sing with joy all the while a fashion model with paparazzi may struggle with each new day's demands.

So, are you happy or unhappy? The answer might not be as simple as I have presented but if you are honest about your joy or angst, ask yourself about that ancient enemy called envy. It might change everything.
